Educator and Parent Reviews

I would say that CanDue has been a big help to my students when planning out their assignments. They are asking me "when is this assignment due?" more than ever before which shows me that they are doing a better job of keeping track of due dates and getting rid of the "wait, that was due?" excuse. I have found a lot of success in requiring students to have a minimum of one submission to CanDue per day because it helps them think about what they should be working on and helps avoid the "I have no homework to work on" excuse that I sometimes run into during a resource class. I have also found that the students have benefited from the CanDue app because it allows them to input their assignments quickly and they can use it when they are walking through the hallways in between classes. They also like that I allow them to use their phones to complete CanDue during my class.

My 15 year old, who has Dyslexia and Dysgraphia, went from being stressed out about tests and final end-of-the-year assignments, to feeling confident and together. And everything was turned in on time. Even my child has said what a great product you have. I sincerely wish your product was available when my older child (with diagnosed executive function disorder) was in school.

OUR STORY

Austin and Kyle started CanDue™ to have an impact on students with executive function issues. Austin, Kyle's brother, has auditory processing issues, ADD and executive function challenges. Despite Austin's genuine desire to do well in school and hard work, Kyle witnessed his brother's frustrations and the inordinate amount of time that was spent planning his daily homework schedule rather than spending time studying the academic content itself. He had challenges with setting priorities, determining steps to start and complete assignments and making a schedule. There were periods of frustration between our supportive parents and him. Kyle believed there must be a better way...

With input from educators, technology professionals, students and parents, Austin and Kyle developed CanDue™ to help students prioritize, plan, schedule and create automated reminders of homework tasks and assignments. As always, parents, teachers, educational specialists and tutors will need to be involved in assisting students to develop their executive function skills but technology can help!

EXECUTIVE FUNCTION (EF) IS A CHALLENGE

Students with EF face difficulties analyzing assignments, planning, prioritizing tasks and scheduling them. They also need reminders and praise for their efforts! Our software also involves parents, teachers, educational specialists and/or tutors to support these students as needed.

Executive function challenges may and often appear in students with attention deficit hyperactivity differences (ADHD/ADD), dyslexia, auditory processing, autism and learning differences.
